Dear Colleague:

I cordially invite you to a special Face-to-Face dinner discussion on the problems of modern American foreign policy on Thursday, December 5, 1985. James Chace, Godfrey Hodgson, and Sanford Ungar will speak on "Estrangement: America and the World."

Our session features the Endowment's 75th anniversary publication in which twelve prominent writers explore themes and events in U.S. postwar experience that contribute to current foreign policy dilemmas. At our program, the book's editor Sanford Ungar will discuss the roots of America's sense of alienation from much of the world community. Foreign policy commentator James Chace will explore America's search for invulnerability and British journalist Godfrey Hodgson will discuss how domestic developments during the 1960s and 1970s weakened America's self-confidence and its role in the world. We look forward to a lively discussion of these and other perspectives from this provocative collection.

For those who are planning to attend, the Endowment will be pleased to provide a gift copy of Estrangement: America and the World in advance of the program. Please use the enclosed card to indicate your plans to attend and the address where you wish the book to be sent.

We will meet in the Carnegie Conference Center, 11 Dupont Circle, 8th Floor (entrance on New Hampshire Avenue, across from the Dupont Plaza Hotel entrance). Commercial parking is now available in the building. You are invited for cocktails at 6:00 pm. Our speakers will open the discussion at 7:00, followed by comments and questions until dinner at 8:00. Discussion will continue after dinner until 10:00 pm.

We look forward to seeing you on December 5. We kindly ask that you respond by mailing back the enclosed card or by calling Julie Reed at 797-6414 at your earliest convenience but no later than November 25.

Sincerely,

Yvonne F. Thayer
